The creature's teeth flew from the rotting jaw in a single piece and landed on the floor a few feet away. Aside from losing its teeth, the creature seemed unfazed by the punch and dove into John's neck. Weak muscles worked the jaws as it tried to chew into John's throat. Disgusted, frightened and ticklish, John laughed as he screamed obscurities at the man that lie on top of him. "Haha, get off of meeheheh, you freehehehak." He rolled out from under his attacker and scrambled back on all fours. He put his hand to his neck. There was no blood, no bite mark or even a hickey, but the entire area felt disgusted and embarrassed by the whole ordeal. And Benjamin takes you on a mesmerizing journey throughout the book.
