Authors Chuck Davis and Kamara Roach have seen a lot of crazy things in their 30+ years working in human resources and employee benefits. From an employee who dressed like President Abraham Lincoln every single day at work to a boss who pretended each meeting with a female employee was actually a gynecological exam, you won't believe what goes on in the workplace. "Honey, What's Your Last Name Again," is an inside account of some of the funniest, most incredible and just plain outrageous stories of employees in the workplace.

About the AuthorAuthors Kamara Roach and Chuck Davis have been friends since high school, live in the same neighborhood, have kids in school together, and even started a business together. As if that wasn't enough to make them absolutely sick of one another, they decided it would be a great idea to co-author this book, full of funny short stories that you'll find difficult to put down. The authors both have an extensive background in human resources and employee benefits. Kamara is SPHR certified, holds a Master's degree in HR Administration and spent ten years as the top HR executive for an international railroad and construction contractor before leaving that position to start an HR consulting business. Chuck held the role of Vice President of HR and Marketing at an area hospital for ten years, then went on to focus primarily on employee benefits where he received numerous awards for his contributions to the benefits industry. Chuck is currently the Director of Human Resources – Benefits for a large, Kansas City-based employer. Once word got out that Chuck and Kamara were writing a book about their experiences in HR, people couldn't wait to share their own HR nightmares. Invite them out to speak at your next group meeting or seminar and they'll share even more juicy details about the stories in the book, plus give you a chance to share your own stories. After all, it will make great material for the sequel...
