This book is a must for any restaurant manager who ever wondered why there is less money in the till than he/she thought there should be. It is also for any restaurant patron who upon driving home from the restaurant thought that the check amount was much higher than he/she was expecting but was too busy conversing with a friend to examine the check in detail. The authors explain that every scam depends on the customer paying in cash. No cash, no scam. It almost makes you want to put up a sign that says, "Only Credit Cards Accepted. No Cash." Francis and DeGlinkta explain each scam in a style that is easy to read and makes you laugh. However, you realize that this is not a laughing matter when you read how the enterprising waiter increases his income at your expense. I highly recommend this book for every restaurant manager who wants to ensure the cash from the restaurant's sales remain in the till and every restaurant patron who wants to ensure the waiter's pockets aren't filled with his/her money.

The book was good and helpful to me as CFO for a restaurant to know what to watch for, but I kept thinking how the proceeds of the book should've gone to repay some of the theft!

Exposed a number of techniques that several servers and cashiers were using trying to "burn down our house". In the end, they are the ones that got burned!

"How to Burn Down the House" is first insider's guide to restaurant and barroom con games. It contains humorous step by step descriptions of every scam in the business with detailed instructions on how to pull them off undetected. Two Bourbon Street veterans usher the reader into the hilarious world of America's most overworked and under-appreciated criminal. Take an enlightening tour through the enterprising mind of the "Pump Handle", the enigmatic anti-hero of the service industry. For the first time his ingenious bag of tricks is revealed and examined in detail. After reading the Scam Bible you will never look at your waiter or bartender quite the same way again.
