By Emily McGee
Who says librarian's don't know everything? No one! That's who. Because librarians really do know everything, as evidenced by this compact, funny, and practical guide by E.H. Baker. If you've been thinking you should hire a life coach, well stop! There's no need for all that. Just buy this slim volume - it's waaaay cheaper and immediately useful. As an already-married I especially liked the attitude and easy-to-follow advice of Chapter 6. But the whole book is a great read - even if you don't agree with all the points, or if they make you uncomfortable it's a great perspective and you're bound to get something out of it. The concluding chapter left me with such a warm feeling and hopeful for us all - we're so fortunate to be able to make choices with our lives, if marriage is something you're up for or already into there are great gems to be mined from this book and it's not a big investment of time to uncover and enact them. Solid advice and perspective.

I'm an already married and I have to say I wish that I had read this book before I got married, but Baker definitely has some good tips that I will be trying on my husband, like the Reign of Terror! I don't know if this book will really help you catch a man but it will definitely make you laugh. Would make a great gift for some of my single girlfriends! 5 stars!

E. H. Baker is hilarious and keeps it real. She says feminists won't appreciate her book... well, she's wrong. I thought that while it was a fun read, it's also full of some great relationship tips; Focus on your strengths and your partner's strengths to make s work. This feminist approves. Way to go, Mrs. Baker!

Are you looking for a husband but having no luck? Do you feel like you are withering on the vine? Are you constantly asking yourself why your relationships aren't working out? Are you married but find your husband's behavior annoying? Do you feel like your husband doesn't do enough around the house? You can change all of the above by reading this short but very informative book written by self proclaimed dating expert E.H. Baker M.L.I.S. You will learn how to catch a man and make him marry you. What does a librarian know about love you ask? Actually, a lot. So pour yourself a glass of wine, sit back and get ready to laugh and maybe cry if you drink too much wine.
