Shari Owen Brown : Tales From the Pantry: Random Rants Musings of a Stay-at-Home Mom before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Tales From the Pantry: Random Rants Musings of a Stay-at-Home Mom:

thought Shari Brown has a quirky, honest and sarcastic sense of humor. The ghost story was creepy and she told it so well I got shivers (the kid whispered!). I was seriously puzzled about the kid who refused to poop for so long (didn't know it was humanly possible to hold it in that long) but lordie did I ever feel sorry for her! I wish she had told us more about the pantry; how did she pull it off? How long were the sojourns to the 'hiding place'? What do the kids do while she is in there? etc. I laughed out loud several times, and cringed many, MANY times. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Hilarious and honest! By Cassie Mills I really enjoyed this book. Although the writing obviously comes from a blog style writer meaning choppy sentences, emoticons, internet slang like LOL, things you don't typically see in a book. Once I got past that, I was able to truly enjoy the book and Shari's humor. Some of her parenting ideas are great and I even found a few useful ones. Mostly it was just hilarious stories of her everyday life (could be my everyday life although I tend to hide in the bathroom or bedroom with the door locked). I recommended it to all my mom friends (with a sense of humor...)! 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Great read for a Stay at Home mom of typical children. By Lucy This book was good. I think she's pretty funny and I liked some of the creative child rearing ideas she came up with, but I would love to see how she would deal with Atypical children. I had a hard time relating to some of her normal problems, but probably, if you are a stay at home mom of children without issues like ADHD, Aspergers, Hearing Loss, or Down's Syndrome, you will find this book absolutely hilarious. The safe-haven at Target is totally relatable on any level, and I found her tone honest, and not bitter or complainative.

Tales From the Pantry: Random Rants Musings of a Stay-at-Home Mom is a collection of witty, funny, and sometimes gut-wrenching stories told by a 40-something mother of two small children. Based upon the popular blog 'Don't Make Me Count to Three!', Shari Owen Brown uses humor to navigate the daily slings and arrows of motherhood. Many parents can relate to the often unspoken challenges of child rearing. And for those who have yet to have children...consider yourself warned! Shari found herself the last of her friends to have children and was then SHOCKED to discover all of the lies she had been told! Why hadn't anybody mentioned these things before?! It was like a secret club of parents who dared not tell the truth or else none of their friends would have children, leaving them all alone in their own private nightmare! Shari blows the lid off of these unspoken challenges discusses daily life in a funny and entertaining way that still manages to speak the truth. It is a great outlet for parents to laugh at themselves through Shari, and realize that they are not alone or crazy (well, maybe just a little!) for feeling the way that they do.
